While no question exists as to the beneficial effects of vanadium in steel, the price until the past year has been too high to make it commercially practicable to use it in Rails. It is universally recognized that the rail situation is one of the most serious confronting the railroad officials today. Considerations, primarily of safety, and also of economy, urgently demand a decided improvement in the quality of rail steel. The tonnage of rails for replacement purposes has greatly increased. Published estimates from the statistics available place this increase at 50 percent, over that of a few...
